Explanatory Notes

Section 8

[1] CRM (customer relationship management) is an information industry term for methodologies, software, and usually Internet capabilities that help an enterprise manage customer relationships in an organized way. For example, an enterprise might build a database about its customers that described relationships in sufficient detail so that management, salespeople, people providing service, and perhaps the customer directly could access information, match customer needs with product plans and offerings, remind customers of service requirements, know what other products a customer had purchased, and so forth.

Support centre services include setting up and managing a support centre. In a business enterprise, a support centre is a place that a user of information technology can call to get help with a problem. In many companies, a support centre is simply one person with a phone number and a more or less organized idea of how to handle the problems that come in. In larger companies, a the same may consist of a group of experts using software to help track the status of problems and other special software to help analyze problems (for example, the status of a company's telecommunications network). Typically, the term is used for centralized help to users within an enterprise. A related term is call center, a place that customers call to place orders, track shipments, get help with products, and so forth. The World Wide Web offers the possibility of a new, relatively inexpensive, and effectively standard user interface to help desks (as well as to call centers) and appears to be encouraging more automation in help desk service. Some common names for a support centre include: Computer IT Response Center, Customer Support Center, IT Solutions Center, Resource Center, Information Center, and Technical Support Center.

[2]Business process outsourcing (BPO) is the act of giving a third-party the responsibility of running what would otherwise be an internal system or service. For instance, an insurance company might outsource their claims processing program or a bank might outsource their loan processing system. Other common examples of BPO are call centres and payroll outsourcing

[3] Knowledge Process Outsourcing in simple words is the upward shift of BPO in the value chain. Old BPO companies that used to provide basic backend or customer care support are moving up this value chain. Unlike conventional BPO where the focus is on process expertise, in KPO, the focus is on knowledge expertise. KPO is involved in services like valuation and investment research, patent filing, legal and insurance claim processing, etc.

[4] A back office is a part of most corporations where tasks dedicated to running the company itself take place. The term comes from the building layout of early companies where the front office would contain the sales and other customer-facing staff and the back office would be those manufacturing or developing the products or involved in administration but without being seen by customers. Although the operations of a back office are usually not given a lot of consideration, they are a major contributor to a business. Examples of back-office tasks include IT departments that keep the phones and computers running (operations architecture), accounting, and human resources. These tasks are often supported by back-office systems: secure e-commerce software that processes company information (e.g. a database). A back-office system will keep a record of the company’s sales and purchase transactions, and update the inventory as needed. Invoices, receipts, and reports can also be produced by the back-office system. In banking, the back office includes a heavyweight IT processing system that handles position keeping, clearance, and settlement. In investment firms, the back office includes the administrative functions that support the trading of securities, including record keeping, trade confirmation, trade settlement, and regulatory compliance. If used in sales, the back office would include functions that fulfill customers' orders and would usually include the duties involved in customer-support call centers. Back offices may be somewhere other than the headquarters of a company. Much of the time they are in areas and countries with cheaper rent and lower labor costs. Back office functions can be outsourced to consultants and contractors in any country.

Medical transcription (MT), also known as MT, is an allied health profession, which deals in the process of transcription, or converting voice-recorded reports as dictated by physicians and/or other healthcare professionals into text format.

[5] These are voice processes which are typically scripted; most of the answers to the queries are found in the database, system and work-flows. These processes require minimal training. Examples include answering credit card queries of customers, customer verification etc.

These are processes with more complicated interactions, and are unscripted; require trouble-shooting and substantial process and contextual training. Examples include late stage credit card collections, answering queries on term deposits.

[6] Advisory services that help clients assess different technology strategies and, in doing so, align their technology strategies with their business or process strategies. These services support customer's IT initiatives by providing strategic, architectural, and operational and implementation planning.

[7] It includes addressing all aspects of the customer's future solution and offering help in developing solution requirement specifications. This also includes, but not limited to, the customer's IT environment, requirements for future software upgrades, performance and scalability, hardware compatibility if required, and usability for end users. In the end, the customer receives a thorough project documentation package, eliminating typical offshore development risks.

[8]Secure services that allow a representative to assist an end-user in solving computer problems, either by showing what steps to take via screen sharing, or with permission, taking control of the desktop and performing a task remotely. Remote Support is often used in conjunction with phone support.

[9] These services are generally technical support, break/fix services or minor enhancements that are delivered for specific software products or applications. These services include revenue delivered from long-term technical support contracts or pay-as-you-go, incident-based support. These services typically include remote troubleshooting capabilities, installation assistance and basic usability assistance.

Maintenance of websites services include on going support to change the content of the current web site files. An example of this is when data such as rates, photos or any current data changes. The files, in turn, will need to be modified to reflect such changes. Once the web site is designed, a maintenance program is available to continue to keep it up to date.

[10] Basic data services are processes involving simple data entry and data conversion from one electronic format to another. Examples include updating static data, entering customer request for a new credit card in the system.

Data preparation services include data preparation services for clients not involving data processing services and input data preparation services include data recording services such as optical scanning or other methods of data entry

[11] Integration services are detailed design, implementation and management services that link applications (custom or packaged) to each other, or with the established or planned IT infrastructure. Specific activities might include project planning, project management, detailed design or implementation of application programming interfaces. These also include installation and on-going maintenance of software packages (e.g. ERP or CRM solutions) and covers services such as migration, upgrades, global rollouts, installation, ongoing production support.

System maintenance services includes a series of on-going routine actions, which repeat in all platforms such as administration of operating systems, including testing, installation, upgrading, and upkeep of systems and software, connectivity among systems, adjustment of software to peripheral equipment and drivers, printer definitions, definition of users and user authorization, information security, handling software malfunctions, installation and development of backup environments of the central servers in all platforms and their on-going maintenance, including follow-up after execution, restoring files from backup in case the users cannot do it themselves, definition of guidelines and work environments, posting work instructions and user guides, handling software licensing and renewal of software contracts, supporting communication software, Web servers, e-mail, statistics packages, word processors, etc. , advice and instruction for support personnel and end users, contact with lecturers for identification of needs, transferring material to public areas in order to serve all, market surveys of commercial software and public domain software, maintenance of central storage systems, disaster recovery planning, maintenance of the central servers, administration of the Name Server and definition of new nodes, maintenance of Web servers and handling of distribution lists etc.

Packaged IT software services include ready-made custom-built software and pre-build integrated software designed to fulfil a whole range of business functions. It typically refers to upscale enterprise software suites, such as ERP or CRM, including the shrinkwrap packages sold through retail outlets. Packaged software, although ready-made, rarely comes ready-to-run. It typically requires weeks or months of configuration work to set it up for the specific needs of each individual business.

[12] Customised application development services include creating new software applications or major enhancements to support any added functionality required by clients. These applications are customised for individual clients.

It also includes creating a computer program comprising of developing the program logic to solve the particular problem, writing the program logic in a specific programming language (coding the program), assembling or compiling the program to turn it into machine language, testing and debugging the program and preparing the necessary documentation. The logic is generally the most difficult part of programming. However, depending on the programming language, writing the statements may also be laborious. One thing is certain. Documenting the program is considered the most annoying activity by most programmers.

[13] Geographic Information System (GIS) services include developing an information system that captures, stores, analyzes, manages, and presents data that are linked to location. Technically, a GIS is a system that includes mapping software and its application to remote sensing, land surveying, aerial photography, mathematics, photogrammetry, geography, and tools that can be implemented with GIS software. In the strictest sense, the term GIS describes any information system that integrates, stores, edits, analyzes, shares, and displays geographic information. In a more generic sense, GIS applications are tools that allow users to create interactive queries (user-created searches), analyze spatial information, edit data, maps, and present the results of all these operations. Geographic Information Science is the science underlying the geographic concepts, applications and systems, taught in degree and GIS Certificate programs at many universities. In the simplest terms, GIS is the merging of cartography and database technology. Consumer users would likely be familiar with applications for finding driving directions, like a GPS program on their hand-held device. GPS (Global Positioning System) is the real-time location component that uses satellites to show your current position, "where am I now" on your device.

[14] Animation is simulation of movement created by displaying a series of pictures, or frames. Cartoons on television are one example of animation. Animation on computers is one of the chief ingredients of multimedia presentations. There are many software applications that enable you to create animations that one can display on a computer monitor. Also includes on-line games development services.

[15] Research and analytics services refer to activities requiring problem solving, synthesis, and data analysis and research skills. Examples include financial ratio analysis for corporate loans, writing industry and company research reports etc.

Data mining is the process of extracting patterns from data. Data mining is becoming an increasingly important tool to transform these data into information. It is commonly used in a wide range of profiling practices, such as marketing, surveillance, fraud detection and scientific discovery. Data mining can be used to uncover patterns in data but is often carried out only on samples of data.

[16]In respect of computer system development services other than programming services, virtually all organizations rely on computer and information technology to conduct business and operate efficiently. Many institutions, however, do not have the internal resources to effectively design, implement, or manage the products and systems that they need. When faced with such limitations, organizations often turn to the computer systems design and related services industry. Establishments in this industry design computer and information systems, develop custom software programs, and provide computer facilities management services. They also may perform various other functions, such as software installation and disaster recovery services. They generally work on a contract basis, assisting an organization with a particular project or problem, such as setting up a secure Web site or establishing a marketplace online, or for ongoing activities, such as the management of an onsite data center or help-desk.

The embedded systems development services include services such as chip design – Application Specific Integrated Circuits (ASIC), Mechatronics – integration of electronic and mechanical design, embedded software design, board design, testing and prototyping. Major industries that use such services are communication systems – handsets and infrastructure, computing and storage and medical equipment.

[17] Plant engineering services include services such as plant layout, plant design including detailed design, material flow simulations, process automation and optimisation. Oil and gas, food processing, chemical industries and consumer packaged goods are some of the major industries where such services are required.

Product design services Include services such as two and three dimensional design (including design conversions), detailed design, production engineering – tooling, fixtures, assembly line design etc. and testing, rapid/final prototyping. Key skills required to deliver such services are CAD, CAM, human simulation, virtual testing and physical testing,. Major industries that use such services are automobiles, aerospace, industrial products and construction equipment.

Product development services Include development of multi-client software products, thereby taking on the responsibilities of all aspects of the product lifecycle – R&D, prototyping, testing, maintenance, support and development of next generation of the products.

[18] It includes a collection of components that work together to realize some objective forms of a system. Basically there are three major components in every system, namely input, processing and output.. In a system the different components are connected with each other and they are interdependent. The objective of the system demands that some output is produced as a result of processing the suitable inputs. System life cycle is an organisational process of developing and maintaining systems. It helps in establishing a system project plan, because it gives overall list of processes and sub-processes required developing a system. System development life cycle means combination of various activities. In other words we can say that various activities put together are referred as system development life cycle. In the System Analysis and Design terminology, the system development life cycle means software development life cycle. The different phases of software development cycle are: system study, feasibility study, system analysis, system design, coding, testing, implementation and maintenance.

[19] It includes basic network management such as fault and performance to include, configuration management, change management, compliance management, application availability management and application response time management. The current focus areas are integration (workflow, portal, etc), usability and supporting wider variety of networks and devices. Networks today have come a long way and have acquired varied technologies. Outsourcing network management and control systems requirements has enabled enterprises to grow and focus on core businesses. Most organizations today go for the managed services partner that can provide customized services with state-of-the-art tools for managing network.

[20] People tend to think of software as a commodity - something you buy off the shelf from a retailer, like a computer or a television. When you buy a commodity, you own the physical object and all or most of the commodity's value is intrinsic to that object. However, when you acquire software, its value comes not from an object (such as the disk it is stored on) but from the knowledge of the programmers who wrote the software. You do not own that knowledge; you are merely acquiring a limited right to use it. In other words, software is an intellectual property, much like books or music. When you buy a book, you own the ink and the paper, but not the words and thoughts of the author. The same holds true for music, software and all other intellectual properties.

Intellectual property includes ideas and creative expressions that have commercial value. By definition, these items are intangible and not easily defined or identified by their physical parameters. Hence, they are copyrighted. A copyright is an Intellectual Property Right (IPR) and is protected by international copyright laws. Intellectual Property Rights include copyrights, trademarks and patents. These enable the owners of the intellectual property to decide who may access and use their property and to protect it from unauthorised use.

For software, usage is controlled by the terms stated in the licence agreement. A software licence provides the legal right to install, use, access, display, run, or otherwise interact with a software programme. A licence does not necessarily include the rights to media, manuals, or support. The way in which the software can be used is determined by the licence agreement. Consumers must agree to the terms of the licence agreement when they use the software. Licence compliance protects a software developer's investment in its intellectual property. For consumers, the benefits of compliance outweigh the disadvantages. With proper compliance, consumers are sure that the software they are using is covered by the terms of the licence - protecting them from incomplete, pirated, corrupted, or malfunctioning software. In addition, they have the option of receiving technical services and support to maximise their investment.

[21] A web hosting service is a type of Internet hosting service that allows individuals and organizations to make their own website accessible via the World Wide Web. Web hosts are companies that provide space on a server they own or lease for use by their clients as well as providing Internet connectivity, typically in a data center. Web hosts can also provide data center space and connectivity to the Internet for servers they do not own to be located in their data center, called co-location.

[22] Data base services include all services provided from primarily structured databases through a communication network. Data bank services are provided by hosts directly or through information brokers. These suppliers offer data banks on-line via telecommunication networks to customers, which can use these databanks in dialogue.

Data processing & tabulation services include services such as data processing and tabulation services, computer calculating services, and rental services of computer time.

On-line information and data base access or retrieval means providing data or information, retrievable or otherwise, to a customer in electronic form through a computer network.

Electronic Data Interchange (EDI) refers to the structured transmission of data between organizations by electronic means. It is used to transfer electronic documents from one computer system to another, i.e. from one trading partner to another trading partner. It is more than mere E-mail; for instance, organizations might replace bills of lading and even Cheques with appropriate EDI messages. It also refers specifically to a family of standards, including the X12 series. However, EDI also exhibits its pre-Internet roots, and the standards tend to focus on ASCII (American Standard Code for Information Interchange)-formatted single messages rather than the whole sequence of conditions and exchanges that make up an inter-organization business process.

Code conversion service is driven by the fact that companies have enormous investments in legacy code for embedded applications. This code is deployed in the field and well understood. There is incalculable risk in starting over. Advances in technology and increases in customer expectations are driving industry to develop ever more complex products. Global competition forces industries to shorten development cycles and achieve product goals with fewer resources. Code conversion service involves migrating entire legacy code applications to executable specification models using proprietary processes (solving Y2K problem is an example).

Protocol conversion is an interpretation service between different devices, allowing them to communicate. It enables a client and server with different networking protocols to communicate with each other.
